CONVICTION

President Harry S. Truman made a good impression on members of all parties in his first appearance before the Congress in his new office.

He spoke quietly, seriously, with dignity and above all with conviction. He was reassuring to his own nation and to those others which stand with it in the war which the forces of righteousness now wage all over the world. His statement that the military purpose of Unconditional Surrender will be maintained, and that the men who head the fighting forces will remain at the same posts where they have been given such good account of themselves, was received with satisfaction everywhere except in the ranks of the enemy.

His expression of sincere humility in the face of his tremendous task, his firm belief that the Lord and his people will help him to be their faithful servant in this grave and momentous time, was received by the nation in the spirit of its utterance.

Conviction is the word which sums up Truman's attitude. He is sure the war will be won. He is sure the peace can be made, and made to endure. He is sure the duty of the great nations is to serve, not to dominate, and he is sure they will fulfill that function. The nation shares with him those firm beliefs, at the same time noble and practical. It is reassured by his certainty. It takes strength from his faith and his hope. It will return to him strength from its own faith in him and in the nation which he represents before his Maker and the world,

Irony of history: the ocean which is now witnessing more fighting than any other is named Pacific.

TELEVISION PROSPECTS

If it's gadgets that make people happy, there must be a lot of happiness in store for them along radio lines. Robert S. Stephan, radio editor for the Cleveland Plam Dealer. suggests a lot of new things coming at us endwise in the next decade or so. Here are some of them.

Television, he says, will be as much a part of the home as piano music. First the pictures will be black and white, then in natural colors. The airplane will promote film telesion. Films will be flown from overseas and "telecast" at our firesides. It will be an arm chair travel. Everybody from everywhere can come into our homes as on a magic carpet. Radio chains will yield to chain tele-

A school superintendent can visit his whole system just by turning a dial. It will be easier for newspaper reporters, if such people survive-they can cover nearly everything just by dialing. All kinds of music will be on tap. Tabloid newspapers and magazines can be summoned as by a magician, by an electric switch. Factories will use the new system for interdepartmental communication. The walkie-talkie radio now used in warfare will be tucked in your pocket, available anywhere. Doctors out on calls can keep in continuous touch with patients. Ship-to-shore communication will be about as simple as calling into the next room. Television screens will be used like wrist watches. And so on and so on-but that's about enough for now.

PROTECTING THE PAST

After all these years the Peruvian government has finally got around to protecting its priceless remains of antiquity. By a new decree the burial mounds which go back to days before the Spanish conquest may not be destroyed without government permission. This should have been done long ago; doubtless many irreplaceable relies of the past have been lost or destroyed by later settlers Americans should not, however, criticise Peru too severely. The remains of our own Mound-builders, some of which are many cenutries old, have almost never had protection. Too many mounds which would have threwn light on the country's past and, even from the most mercenary standpoint, been valuable because of the victors they would have attracted, have been leveled to lay out I ofer

'These Days' By George E. Sokolsky

I recall clearly the assassination of William McKinley. The nation was shocked, grieved, saddened. We, at school, were told what it meant to the country to lose a President by audden death. We had classroom memorial services and I can remember it as today, going to a religious service to hear his favorite hymns, "Nearer My God to Thee," and "Lead Kindly Light," then now to me but so imbedded in my memory from that solemn occasion that they have ever been my favorites.

William B. McKinley was saved from the sacrilege of the cacaphony of the radio, the reduction rilege of the cacaphony of the radio, the reductio ad abaurdum of hours and hours of repetition of eulogy. My memory recalls nothing but the solemn, the respectful, the lofty. We buried our President and we loved our country. A soldier in uniform hiew "Taps" and not an eye was dry. I could not help thinking during the past weekend that radio newscasters accustomed to staccato football reporting, comedians employed in slapstick laughter, lady novelissts who write of love in its teens, lack the solemnity of an old-fushioned preacher; their simulation of the depth of emotions often sounds a mockery. Radio treatment of the death of a President was too organized, too pushing. When people want to cry, they seek at most sad music not the basso voice of an immature actor turned mourner.

sad music, not the basso voice of an immature actor turned mourner.

The radio needs editing; It requires intelligent direction. The radio seems to run hog wild whenever anything occurs that gives free rein to the fancies of its varied management. They apparently suppose that excess is a mark of efficiency; that

And this much their noisiness proved beyond doubt: America is so great that no American is indispensable. I say the radio proved that, for on Friday and Saturday, for a full 36 hours, this instrument of expression gave the impression that it was the United States that had died. And that is obviously not so. The United States goes on. Our troops go on. Our factories go on. Our farms go on. Our stores and shops and offices go on. Everything goes on. Those who want to weep dry their eyes and march on to the work of the day. Bables are born even on the day of mourning and one of thing goes on. Those who want to weep dry their eyes and march on to the work of the day. Babies are born even on the day of mourning and one of them, some 40 or 50 years hence, may even become President of the United States. Upon'this continent, men and women of European ancestry have for more than three centuries built a great nation—the greatest now upon this earth.

This country was not created by one man nor built by one man nor preserved by one man. Millions of strong, independent, daving men and women, risking for creation, building what no other people dated to build, a free land for independent individuals, each sure of himself and unafraid, crossing mountain and desert, cutting the sod and making a home of it, creating a village out of nothing but putting in it. first of all, a school and a church, learning to live together, free yet without licentiousness—that America goes on, in war as in peace, fearless and true to its ideals.

And so it shall be tomorrow as it was yesterday. Nothing has happened in this generation that has not stirred the imaginations and fears of men in other generations. The swiftest progress of this United States, measured by any yardstick, was made in the period between the Civil War and the World War I. Yet after Lincoln died, there were voices to cry, The end has come. After after Woodrow Wilson, men cried, The end has come. And so men cry today.

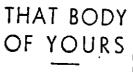

row Wilson, men cried, The end has come. And so men cry today.

But America has no end. It knows no end. Its story goes on and on. There is no despair in its voice. With us, it is never even "The King is dead, Long live the King." With us it is "Long may our land be bright With freedom's holy light;

Protect us by they might,

Great God. our King:"

We can all likely remember some boy or girl school or elsewhere who took fits. A fit was a spectacle that caused fright yet sympathy. Many of us may have thought of it as a form of mental disease or insanity. In some cases the family did not allow the child to attend the regular school but sent him to a private school. If the family is sympathetic but does not express this sympathy in words but more in helpful actions the patient has the best possible chance to get better and become a useful member of the community.

"On the other hand, if relatives have a sense of shame about epilepsy they create in the patient a state of anxiety and distress which has an unwholesome effect on such individuals. This is serious because epileptic attacks (seizures) begin during or before puberty (12 to 14 in girls, 14 to 16 in boss), and naturally the parents, because these children are so young, do everything to protect them, thus not allowing them to mature or develop as do other children who take their own part in school or playground. Washington, April 21—The nation has had a week to size up what happens when there is a change of administration in the midst of a world war.

The change tends to prove and disprove certain previously held conceptions. Those who believed such a change of leadership would affect the conduct of the war have been proved wrong. Those who believed that continuity of administration is essential to prevent widespread misunderstandings of foreign policy and uncertainties have been proved right.

In the last presidential campaign the argument was made that change might be disastrons, would slow up the war, and create tuncertainty abroad. The change instituted that change might be disastrons, would slow up the war, and create tuncertainty abroad. The change last week cannot be compared really to a change brought about by an election. For it is the two and a half month interval between election and inauguration which produces the uncertainty. Garden.
The house of stone and frame is one of the early Ulster county dwellings and apparently was built during Dutch occupancy of the hamlet, two miles from Kingston on Route 209.

Pirchase of the house was made by Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse when Mr. Morehouse retired from his New York Supreme Court duties. They engaged Charles S. Keefe, 258 Lucas avenue, local architect, member American Institute of member American Institute of 1433 Architects, and an authority restoration needed.

The only reco records available The only records available about the house show it was va-cant and in bad repair in 1793. Originally the dwelling was of one room and then other rooms and a central hallway were added. The frame section was added about 1830.

The house was sold last year by Mr. and Mrs. Morehouse and is now the Nieuw Dorp.
